TO THE READER.

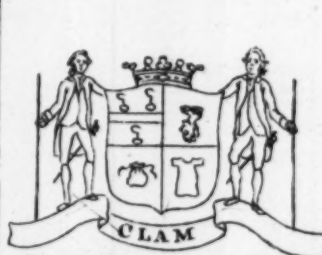

THE registering of arms being esteemed a proof of honorable descent, it must be universally allowed, that an intelligent and descriptive quality, dwelling in such arms, is pertinently useful to the world, and more especially to the families who bear them. On the strength of such a demonstration, the writer of the following pages has rejected the common and patenteed bearings already painted on the carriages of our N——ty, and instituted what 16 he

he judges a wiser delineation of the honors they deserve. As sign-posts have been justly ridiculed for preserving an ill-placed affinity with the houses they decorate, so arms are but a subject of laughter if they describe a symmetry of hieroglyphicks opposite to the character of the L—d, who marshals them.

The public cannot be displeased with a feeble attempt to banish these contradictions, and a desire to validate a more reasonable system of heraldical information.
